ABSTRACT

In this paper centered on the reflections of Abaza Hasan Rebellion on Kayseri, the Kayseri Ser’iyye Registries have been used as the main resource, and the effects that the Rebellion of Jelali Abaza Hasan left on Kayseri have been investigated in accordance with the documents having been found out here. The people who supported this rebellion in Kayseri, what kind of jobs they had, and the confiscatory goods of those having taken part in the rebellion have all been studied in this study. The support to the rebellion given by the Janissaries whom the State charged them to protect the sanjaks and provinces across the boundaries has been discussed along with the material and spiritual costs that the rebellion caused.

Introduction

In the aftermath of Seyh Jelali Rebellion in 1519, the bandits and the simple brigands revolting against the State were called Jelali. Since the Jelali Rebellions were suppressed with the immediate assassination of their leaders, they were never long-lasting. From the late 16th to the mid-17th centuries, these rebellions went on intermittently. Having benefited from the fact that the state was at war on two separate boundaries, these bandits destroyed the villages, the towns and even the cities. As a societal phenomenon, the banditry seems to have been a method of response which was carried out by those having encountered with some injustice and tyranny from the State. Besides this aspect of the matter, not only the kind of response that ordinary men showed, but also that of the state officials on the high ranking displayed when they were exposed to injustice in any way was literally in the form of banditry. These people preferred to tyrannize over the public with the people they gathered around themselves. Likewise, while Abaza Hasan Pasha was one of the most senior officials of Ottoman State, he revolted against the State due to the injustice he was himself exposed to and then carried out an act of oppression and tyranny with the power he gathered on his side over the public in the country.

Throughout this study, the janissaries in Kayseri who tyrannized over and robbed the people having actively taken part in the Rebellion of Jelali Abaza Hasan, and some from the local people who were voluntarily or forcibly supporters of the rebellion have been investigated. We have seen that the janissaries in Kayseri gave a considerable support to this rebellion. Just following the assassination of Jelali Abaza Hasan, his supporters were also killed one by one. All the properties they had were confiscated by the State. In addition, the whole properties of those who were detected to have taken part in the rebellion but could not be found anywhere were included into the process of state confiscatory. Besides the state officials in the quarters and villages of Kayseri, there were some having supported this rebellion within the subject. The issue of taking part in the rebellion did not always occur in accordance with the people’s own wills. The people from the Jelali groups urged the persons both from the military class and from the reaya (tax paying subjects) to take part in the rebellion by the force of gun. The fact that some members of Jelali Abaza Hasan’s group left there can be found out in the records. The people in Kayseri who took part in the rebellion collected a great amount of money and food from the public. The great quantity of the properties having confiscated by the State and the fact that these properties were repurchased by the wives and children of those who took part in the rebellion is a kind of indicator of how a huge amount of money they collected in an unjust way from the public. Thus, this rebellion affected the public in both material and spiritual regards.

In the period when the rebellion began, the Ottoman State was busy with the military campaigns both to Crete and Poland. The rebellions within the country in this period caused some extra problems for the State, which waged a war outside the country, and increased the work load of the soldiers and the tax amount to be taken from the public. In the farman to have been sent, it was required that the military units - including sipahi (cavalry at the porte), janissary, korucu, oturak, cebeci (armorer), topçu (artillermen), azeemi oğlan (rookie or cadet) and the other groups- having stayed at their headquarters without attending the expedition mentioned above sweep the tyrants reaching at their regions and allow them collecting zahire (cereal)\(^2\). Those who would not attend any campaign in that year were charged with suppressing the rebellion.

1. LIFE OF JELALİ ABAZA HASAN

Because of his great efforts at having suppressed the Kara Haydaroğlu uprising, Abaza Hasan, one from the kapıkulu (janissary guards) cavaliers related under the Silahtar Division, was appointed as an agha (vaivode) of all the Turkomans in Anatolia. Having considered his dismissal not depending on any reasonable reason, he captured the area between Gerede and Bolu by having revolted against the State. Upon he did so, the armed troops of the former bandit Katurçoğlu were charged to quash his uprising, but could not achieve. In the aftermath of his victory, Abaza Hasan, having attempted to collect taxes by force from the public, began to think of İpsir Pasha as a candidate to grand vizierate and even intended to walk to Istanbul just for this purpose. Though having been persuaded to obey the order in exchange for the position of Turkoman Agha, he was later imprisoned in Yedikule due to some complaints about himself. Thanks to the fact that Bahayi Efendi became the Sheikh-ul Islam and also his aid, he was released from jail (1652). The administration of the sanjak Ohri was given to himself through him. When İpsir Pasha, one of the Abazas, was appointed as grand vizier by Mehmed IV, he called him. Till the execution of İpsir Pasha, Abaza Hasan was always loyal to him, withdrew towards Anatolia with the soldiers from his remaining army and took again his office of Turkoman Agha (1655). Abaza Hasan later settled in Aleppo and he gave so damage and behaved so cruelly in Syria that Divanı Humayun intended to proclaim that he was a ‘fermanlu’. In the farman with a date of Safer 1066 (December 1655) on sent to Hasan, Grand Seigneur of Karaman, it was required to set off for a military campaign to Aleppo in order to remove Seydi Ahmed, Abaza Hasan and İpsir Pasha who often visited Aleppo Castle in the region and to take the situation under control. Thus, the soldiers in Kayseri which was within the boundaries of the Province of Karaman were charged to suppress this uprising and departed for Adana. However, Grand Vizier Suleyman Pasha re-approved his office and charged him with the defense of the Straits of Çanakkale. He was assigned as a governor to Diyarbakır. He rebelled two years later and marched by commanding a considerably significant army with the pretext of demanding Grand Vizier Köprulu Mehmed Pasha’s dismissal. By considering that Köprulu made more than a thousand sipahi and much more janissaries execute, they remarked that they would not set off without dismissing the grand vizier. In the course of this march, they did not allow plunder, but put some taxes changing from 10,000 kurus to 20,000. They forced the Kadi of Bursa to go to the Sultan’s Office. Sultan Mehmet hotly addressed the kadi so: “The Polish King got away from this gaza, though he was a non-Muslim. Those say that they are Muslim and the servants of the Sultan of Islam. Is this situation fitting in with Ahl-i Islam for those who get scared of dying caused by the delusion of the Satan and beguiled so many people for such a movement? Previously did I send him an order about his mercy and giving up. Provided that they give up such an act of sedition by fearing to march as far as here, they take part in the defense of Baghdad, or do their best in their office by dissolving their groups. Is not obeying Ulu’l Amr something to do with Islam? Otherwise, swearing on God, I will kill all by not leaving even one survived. Indeed I would kill you, but an envoy cannot be blamed for his mission.*

After having threatened Bursa, he absolutely defeated Murtaza Pasha, who was sent against himself, around Ilgun because Murtaza’s 30,000 soldiers disobeyed him. However, he caught in a trap which was set for him, and when he attempted to negotiate in order to lay down arms after having arrived in Aleppo from Ayintap, he was assassinated by huda.

2. THOSE HAVING TAKEN PART IN THE REBELLION FROM KAYSERI AND THE COST OF THE REBELLION ON KAYSERI

The Rebellion of Abaza Hasan was suppressed in 1659. Within a year just following the assassination of Abaza Hasan, the fact that ten thousands people who supported the uprising, no matter they were criminal or innocent, were then executed can be understood from the official records. In the aftermath of the assassination of Abaza Hasan, some farmers requiring the execution of those people both having taken part in and supported the rebellion were issued. The State confiscated all the properties of both the ones who were executed and who were escapee at that time. Based on the records in Seriyye Sicilleri, a total of 95 people from Kayseri have been seen to

A farman was issued about the fact that Murtaza Pasha, having been charged to suppress the revolt of Jelali Abaza Hasan and assigned as serasker, was to collect \textit{sursat} cereals from the Kayseri public for the soldiers. In order to meet the needs of Murtaza Pasha’s army, a sursat tax of 15.000 \textit{Istanbulian kile sair} (barley), 30 \textit{kantar} (steelyard) \textit{revgan-i sade} (pure butter) and 2.000 sheep was put on the Kayseri public. It was determined that a kile of sair was 40 \textit{akce} (Ottoman monetary unit), a sheep per was 170 akce and a kantar of \textit{revgan-i sade} was 4300 akce\textsuperscript{12}. A total of 1.069.000 akce was collected from the Kayseri public as sursat tax. For the purpose of meeting the needs of the Ottoman army which were charged to take the rebels under the control, the Kayseri public had to pay an extra tax of 1.069.000 akce over the others they had already paid. This tax was the one demanded only from the Sanjak of Kayseri. Murtaza Pasha collected some sursat tax at each sanjak which he passed through. This proved that what a great amount of money was spent so as to suppress just an uprising.

Just before the assassination of Abaza Hasan, in a farman issued in 1658, after it was stated that some accommodation cost about 300 akce from each of 509.5 \textit{avanzhane} in Kayseri was required ‘as it was usual’ for the years of 1659 and 1660, it was again demanded to collect another tax for meeting the needs of six troops of janissary and kapikulu which were all charged to sweep the Jelali bandits. It was decided to collect an accommodation tax of 600 akce per, by a rise of 300 akce to the usual accommodation cost, 300 akce, which was determined to be counted for the years of 1659 and 1660\textsuperscript{13}. Eventually, a total of 305.700 akce accommodation tax was additionally paid for the purpose of suppressing the uprising. However, taking account of the fact that the people in the same region would also pay sursat tax, the 150 akce of 600 akce tax having collected from each house was repaid to the tax-payers\textsuperscript{14}. In order to suppress the revolt of Jelali Abaza Hasan, 1.298.275 akce was collected in Kayseri.

3. PROFESSIONAL SITUATIONS OF THE PEOPLE HAVING TAKEN PART IN THE REBELLION OF JELALI ABAZA HASAN

The remarkable majority of those who took part in the uprising consisted of the janissaries. While some janissaries were clearly mentioned in some of the records, some others were implied to have been a janissary by the title ‘Beşe’\(^{15}\) they used. The title ‘Beşe’, a softened form of the word ‘Paşa’, was used with the adjectival word ‘Racil (by walking)’. Putting the title ‘Beşe’ into the end of the original names of especially the janissaries was something that took the form of tradition, which referred to the foot soldiers among the kapikulus such as \textit{janissary, topcu, cebeci, bolukbasi, cavus}\(^{16}\). There were some people who bore the title ‘Solak’\(^{17}\) among the rebels. The 60\(^{th}\), 61\(^{st}\), 62\(^{nd}\) and 63\(^{rd}\) ones of ‘Solak’ janissary jemaat \textit{ortas} (equivalent to regiment) were called ‘solak’. They did the task of bodyguard units belonging to the Sultan\(^{18}\). Kethudayeri\(^{19}\) Yusuf Aga also took part in the uprising, who was one of the commanders at Janissary Ocagi\(^{20}\).

The person who was the \textit{mutawalli} of the bridge situated at Kesikkopru also took part in the uprising. The villages of Cukur, Germir and Amarat within the boundaries of Kayseri existed on the lands which were dedicated to the repair of Kesikkopru near Sivas. The mutawalli of these villages was Cukuroglu Mehmed Aga. He escaped by having joined the forces of Jelali Abaza Hasan who would be all executed based on the farman. Since the mutawalli was escapee, it was required that the crops having collected from these villages be kept in a secure place under the control of a reliable man and the

Apart from those mentioned above, some ordinary men without any title gave support to this revolt. The State also confiscated the properties of these people by having considered them a military unit because they were directly a part of an armed group against the authority. As stated above, the people who were capable of using a weapon - the majority were the soldiers of the State - caused the public to encounter with some problematic situations in both material and spiritual regards together with themselves by having supported the revolt of Jelali Abaza Hasan. Besides this military unit of the State, some \textit{aghas} who were the leaders of other local regions, and some noble men supported this uprising.

4. THE EXECUTION OF THOSE HAVING TAKEN PART IN THE REBELLION OF JELALI ABAZA HASAN AND THE CONFISCATION OF THEIR PROPERTIES

a. The Application of Confiscation Style

Confiscation has been often used as a concept with two-fold meaning. One is that private property is seized in the name of the State or the Sultan without any payment for its worth. In the other sense, the confiscation takes place when the properties which are banned with the laws are seized by the State\textsuperscript{22}. The whole state organization and the society in the Ottoman Empire consist of two basic classes in general terms. One of them is \textit{reaya}, and the other one is military class. The confiscation towards the wealth the members of military class possessed became a customary application. The confiscation about the reaya’s wealth never occurred. However, when the reaya died without any inheritor, his wealth was transferred into state treasure. Notably, from the late 17\textsuperscript{th} century, the wealth of the class called \textit{ayaz} began to have been confiscated. Though not included into the military class, it gained a military character because having being recognized by the government and accordingly having increased its influence and power in the course of the time. Their wealth was also included into confiscatory processes. The fact that their stance against the State seemed to have been a considerable power resulted in such an application\textsuperscript{23}.

Though the scope of the confiscation showed variations related to some details such as the crime of the executed person and the personality of the statesman who died a natural death, the application of confiscation was often extended over his all properties. Nonetheless, in order to help them maintain their lives easily, an adequate amount of property was allocated for the spouse and the children that the guilty man left behind. Even on some occasions, it was seen that a kind of salary was paid to them. On the other hand, if the dying man owed anyone, all his debts were paid with his properties which were confiscated. Besides this, if this man had some receivables, the money was included into ‘miri mat’²⁴.

The confiscation included all the properties of the executed person, but in the process of confiscatory operations, the properties belonging to the wives, the children, if not any, the other inheritors of the executed person’s could not be seized anyway. In this case, the confiscatory application was only limited to the personal properties of the executed person. This principle about the private ownership was absolutely performed. Only the movable goods, real estates and the receivables that the criminal possessed were subject to confiscatory process²⁵.

The confiscatory procedure in the country was often implemented under the supervision of the local kadıs , and the sanjakbeyi and beylerbeyi, which were known as ‘Ahl-i Orf”²⁶.

b. The Confiscatory Properties and Selling Procedure

In those farmans having sent to the sanjaks and provincial centers, it was required that the transportable food and properties belonging to the bandits of Jelali Abaza be sent to Asitane-i Saadet, and the money obtained from those impossible to be transported after being sold on auction at Suk-i Sultani be sent to Hazine-i Amire²⁷.

The fact that the people whose properties were confiscated by the State were economically in good conditions proved that they never had financial troubles. The wealth of these people seemed much more than that of ordinary men. If to have a glance at the distribution of wealth, it can be easily seen that the military class had a little more wealth. The wealthy people from the public took part in the uprising. Thus, we can make an assumption that the people having took part in the uprising did not so due to their economic problems.

The categories of the properties forming the wealth were the following: real estate, cash, the receivables, slaves and cariyas, mounts and pack animals, merchandise, household goods (such as plates, shallow frying pans, rugs, felts, carpets, books, cushions, cauldrons, buckets, saucepans, cloth, sacks), clothing, jewellery, weapons and sets of weapons, sets of horse, some equipments, books and food.

Among them, the names of the owners and the titles of the books are the following: Ahmed (Hasbek Quarter) (Kelam-ı Şerif), Kalaycızade Mustafa (the book’s value is 225 akce), Koca (Camî-i Kebir Quarter) (the book’s value is 210 akce), Parmaksız Ahmed (Kelam-ı Şerif 450 akce, Turkic Story Book, 100 akce), Kabasakaloglu Mustafa (Merkebeı Quarter) (Kelam-ı Şerif 1800 akce, Muhammediye 850 akce), Selim (Camî-i Kebir Quarter) (Kutub 12 volumes 600 akce), Al-Haj Murad oglu Veli (Kelam-ı Şerif 1100 akce), Osmâned (Tepecik Quarter) (Kelam-ı Şerif 320 akce).28

There were some kinds of weapons among the confiscated properties. A rifle and a pistol belonging to Kethudayeri Yusuf were all worth 50 akce, and Boyaca Ahmed’s three rifles were worth 1200 akce.29

Some real estates such as houses, lands, gardens and manzik were confiscated. The capital obtained from these real estates after all were sold was then transferred into the treasury. Apart from these, when the person who was subject to confiscatory had some receivables from anybody, they were all included into miri ma (State property). For instance, in Zilhicce 1069 (or on 20th August, 1659) the bandit named Kalaycızade Murtaza had receivable of 889 esedi kurus from Murad Bey, and this capital was seized for miri from Murad Bey.30 The money which had a worth of six kantar (quantial) 14 batman rice, which was originally Kalaycızade Murtaza’s but Murtaza gave it Molla Ali as debt, was given for miri.31

The properties of 95 persons in Kayseri were confiscated by the State. The total amount of capital confiscated from these persons was 2,113,782 akce and 169,773 kurus. (Since the monetary equivalence of some bandits’ properties were not recorded, only the sums mentioned in the documents for Kayseri were added. Thus, it can be said that much more capital than the amount to be mentioned was transferred into the treasury). Based on the farman mentioned before, an esedi kurus was equal to 81 akce. Accordingly, 169.773 esedi kurus was equal to 13.751.613 akce. A sum of 15.865.395 akce was transferred to the state treasury. For Murtaza Pasha, who was charged to suppress the uprising, and his soldiers, the public in Kayseri paid the sursat tax, totally equal to 1.069.000 akce, which was literally one-fifteenth of the confiscated properties.

The confiscated properties, along with their quantities and their values, belonging to several bandits are given below:

The properties which were often used in the houses in daily life, and the real estates such as house, garden and field were included into the confiscatory procedure. All the goods that the bandits possessed were sold.

The new owners of the properties which were sold on auction houses were occasionally mentioned in the documents. We have seen that the properties of some 27 rebels were re-purchased by their wives, children, siblings or sons-in-law (Table-4). Indeed, such a process of repurchasing the properties in exchange of a great amount of money proved that they were in good conditions in economic sense. Besides this, the situation evokes a kind of suspicion on whether they embezzled the money having collected from the public. The latter scenario is highly possible because the women could not inherit such great money from their fathers in terms of the general conditions of the period. Looking at the table, it can be easily realized that the properties for sale were mostly repurchased by the members of that person’s family.

c. The complaints of those not having been participants in the rebellion of Jelali Abaza Hasan about the confiscatory procedure on their properties

Though they did not take part in the uprising, the fact that the properties of some people were seized by the confiscatory officials is among the matters which came to court. Just after they proved that the property belonged to theirselves, what they possessed was returned to them.

Though the nomadic Turkomans living in Kayseri and around did not support the revolt of Abaza Hasan Pasha, their properties were attempted to be confiscated by the state officials as if they had taken part in the uprising. For instance, the properties of those affiliated with the community of Sandıklı were sought to be confiscated on the basis of the same reason, but then it came out that they were done something injustice. Likewise, as a consequence of the case sued by Halil oglu Mehmet against Yusuf Aga who was in charge of confiscating the properties belonging to Jelali Abaza Hasan and his servants in case he does not join four goats and 44 sheep among those confiscated properties into the state treasury, the court decided to take this right from the hands of Yusuf Aga, demonstrating the innocence of Halil Oglu Mehmet, a nomadic Turkoman (the document dated August 1659).

Besides the situation above, though they did not give support to Abaza Hasan, there were some people who were unjustly treated by having been demonstrated as if they were his servants. For example, four retired janissaries were imprisoned at Kayseri Castle on the allegation that they acted on behalf of Abaza Hasan. They applied to court by stating that they were forced to support him, but they fled at the first opportunity. The information about their characteristics from the governorship, and then it was testified that they fled from Abaza Hasan’s house and lived on their own without giving any harm to anybody. The court made a decision about their release from the prison.

The officials who were in charge of confiscating the properties of the people having taken part in the rebellion of Jelali Abaza Hasan sometimes implemented the same procedure for the properties belonging to the wives of the bandits. At this situation, by applying to the court, the women stated that their properties could not be confiscated anyway since they inherited them from their fathers. For instance, the properties of Al-Haj Hacı Budak Bese, one of the residents in Hacı Arap Quarter, were ordered to be confiscated because he was among the bandits. However, his wife Emine bint-i Abdulnebi proved that the properties in her house belonged to herself. For that reason, the properties in his house were excluded from the scope of confiscatory.

Likewise, Hussein Jelali Abaza living in Cami-i Kebir Quarter escaped just after having taken part in the rebellion. When the officials arrived at his house for the confiscatory procedure on his properties, his wife Ayse prevented them from confiscating the properties in their house by having stated that she had herself inherited all the properties from her father Eyup. In a similar way, Sachoglu Mustafa escaped just following his attendance in the revolt, but then he was executed. His wife Fahri Hatun Hazma proved that she had inherited all from her father when the officials attempted to confiscate the properties in their house.

d. Confiscatory Officials

In order to confiscate the properties of those who took part in the uprising though they were janissaries, Kapicibasi Yusuf Aga and Besir Cavus, the janissary sergeant of 41st division, were charged with applying the confiscatory procedure. Apart from those mentioned, Mustafa Aga and Molla Ali were charged with applying the same procedure about the properties of the ordinary men. Yusuf Aga was charged with recording the properties, supplies and real estates of the Jelali bandits in Karaman, Kayseri, Nigde and around.

CONCLUSION

The State made his officials in the center of the provinces and sanjaks responsible for suppressing the rebellion by issuing some farmans focusing on the punishment of the bandits of haramzade, saruca and sekbam. At this point, the rebels both demanded some taxes from the public and also went on having provoked the soldiers.

While the The Grand Vizier Koprulu Mehmed Pasha’s expedition towards Erdel was underway, the appearance of this revolt and the recall of the Grand Vizier led to much less utilization from the success hitherto than it was expected. Just following the conquest of Yanova, he wanted to follow Rakoczy where he intended to build an authority. However, his plan on Rakoczy was achieved later. The futuhat to be made on European frontiers remained backward for a time, and since the rebellion was underway, all the forces of the State was directed to this revolt. This situation also led to a kind of negligence in the military campaign to Crete.

One of the consequences that the Abaza revolt caused is the gradually losing sense of obedience in the military organization, which had already been observed for a long time. Upon the precautions which was taken by Koprulu Mehmed Pasha in order to regulate the military organization, the sipahis rebelled, but later their uprising was suppressed with some strong measures. The Kapıkulu cavaliers who lost their prestige over those precautions mentioned above could not do useful anything until Mehmed IV was dethroned. On the other hand, timarlı sipahis began to deteriorate due to the inappropriate decisions from the late 16th century, and accordingly they lost their former power and dignity in the mid-century, and the ongoing uprisings also increased the degree of deterioration. The disorganized forces such as levent, sarca and sekban whom the viziers and provincial governors supported began to be dominant instead of those mentioned above.

Especially among the janissaries in Kayseri, there were some having supported the uprising. Almost all the rebels were executed just after their arrest. Their properties were confiscated in order to compensate the damage they gave to the State and the public.

Eventually, those who took part in the revolt of Jelali Abaza Hasan voluntarily or forcibly were punished somehow by the State. However, much of the punishment procedure was again carried out on the public. All the expenses of the army which had been sent against Abaza and his fellows were met with the extra taxes loaded on the public. The continuously ongoing naval military campaign exhausted the public, and the uprisings at home damaged the properties and lives of the people. The fact that ninety-five people took part in the revolt demonstrates us how a great uprising occurred. A majority of ninety-five people above were members of the military units. This situation increased the degree of trouble that the State faced. Though some from the public supported the uprising, we cannot determine any non-Muslim who supported this uprising at that time.
As a requirement of the policy implemented, the Ottoman State, on one hand, punished the bandits, on the other hand, did so the public who supported them or did not resist against the appearance of banditry, if not supported. The public who was in charge of paying the taxes in order to compensate all the expenses of the state soldiers got depressed both about the destruction of the bandits and the financial requirements of the State. Again the public had to pay the bill of the banditry having occurred in its own lands. As a political requirement, The Ottoman State punished the public so on the land in which the uprising germinated.
